Letter from Traveler

A[illegible], April 29 1865.

EDITOR OREGONIAN:

The Sacramento arrived at this port [illegible] As usual the coal and water barges [illegible] replenish and also a new supply of [illegible] sheep, poultry, swine, eggs and fruit began [illegible] to be collected. Small passenger boats came out to the ship and several passengers went [illegible] for breakfast and a stroll about the [illegible] town before the sun should become hot [illegible] of oranges, limes, [illegible], pineapples [illegible] curious and shells [illegible] a brisk trade began and continued until our departure at one and a half o'clock [illegible] The Pacific Mail Steamship Company [illegible] anthracite coal [illegible] the present [illegible] on board 150 tons [illegible] which left the day before, [illegible] was to San Francisco, probably took as much. About twenty [illegible] Mexicans are employed [illegible] the coal [illegible] them to the barges which are large [illegible] and thence to the steamers. About a dozen [illegible] to be employed on the water boats. A part of their large piles of coal are covered with sheds. Others are exposed to the weather.

Two United States war steamers were lying at anchor in the harbor, the Lancaster, flagship of Admiral Pearson, 22 guns, and the Saranac, a smaller vessel. The old California of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was there, and a Peruvian vessel. The French and English vessels had left.

Most of the passengers went on shore during the [illegible] and a large supply of fruit especially [illegible] oranges at two cents a piece were bought. The fare—fifty cents each way,—and the sale of fruit—must leave many hundreds of dollars among the people per month. Our company spent from six to eight hundred dollars, and a steamer calls every five days.

But this old town remains the same from year to year and from generation to generation. Hardly a new house, store or shed has been put up since I was here thirteen years ago. The same old roughly paved streets, rudely built stores and dwellings greet you; the same old fort stands upon the hill, the ruins of the old cathedral crumble away slowly. My first call was at the church—Catholic of course. The priest was at the altar with one attendant. The people, mostly [illegible] were kneeling on the stone floor. It seemed to be an early mass.

A wedding had occurred that morning in the church. The bride was said to be the daughter of Gov. [illegible]. Our next call was upon the U. S. Consul, G. M. Cole, Esq., late of California. It was very pleasant to see the Stars and Stripes—its it a symbol of home and of a free people and a free country, floating over the [illegible] rule of a Republic. And yet, perhaps, we ought to honor the Mexicans of this province. When the French came they retreated to the hills and barricaded the passes and roads so that no provisions or fruits were brought in. The French army could get no supplies. The soldiers became sick and many died. Finally they all left and the people returned to their homes. Our Consul says that they will do the same again if the French return. They rejoice in the Union victories of our Government. Our steamer brought the news of Lee's surrender, which gladdened the hearts of our countrymen here, and brought forth a national salute from our ship of war, and three rousing cheers from our brave mariners, which were as heartily responded to from our ship.

In our stroll we saw a school of [illegible] boys from [illegible] to [illegible] years of age, writing in their copy books under the care of a master. On our return the teacher was present and all were quiet. We visited a garden, under the care of an American, Mr. Steelman, who had been here 17 years. Bananas were in bloom and ripening. Oranges, limes, mangoes, tamarinds, white [illegible] or ripe [illegible]. Watermelons, radishes, corn and beans were ready for the table. Mr. S. pointed out a palm tree and remarked that it grew wild in the hills and that the ground is covered a foot deep with palm when the pod opens. [illegible] might become an important article of commerce at the present high rates of materials for mattresses. The sun grew very hot and we were glad at 10 o'clock to return to our ship, having no wish to take up our abode even for a day in this venerable city. [illegible] indicates the use of soap. [illegible] worth of this article is annually sold here, we [illegible] doubt remains [illegible] its wise appreciation. Yours,

TRAVELER.

JEFF DAVIS' PIETY.—It will be remembered that many among us, while feebly condemning the course that Jeff. Davis and his brother rebels took in their efforts to destroy the country, nevertheless insisted that these abominable fiends were men of exemplary private conduct and true christian piety. Just as if men who are guilty of treason and its concomitant, murder, are not also capable of all other crimes. The following on Jeff. Davis' piety is from the Hartford Post:

About three years ago, that eminent sinner, Jefferson Davis, in the midst of a succession of daily murders, became convinced that he had experienced a change of heart. He joined the most fashionable church in Richmond and, surrounded by a large and curious crowd, was confirmed—[illegible] his sins. Not two weeks ago the same church was filled with rebel officers and people. The [illegible] in piety had become a veteran. He had [illegible] murdered and tortured half a million men by violence, but he had deliberately, and in cold blood, starved thousands of his fellow men to death. On this memorable Sunday, he sat in his pew with a bowed head, whitened by the effects of his long course of religious discipline. An orderly [illegible] up the aisle and touching him on the shoulder, handed him a slip of paper. With a trembling hand he took it, as though it had been a death warrant. He opened and read it. It was short, but the few words opened up a vista of [illegible] probable capture and a felon's death [illegible] unsuccessful traitor and revolutionist. He faltered and turned pale as the situation forced itself upon him. The paper said:

"My lines are broken. Richmond must be evacuated by midnight.

"ROBERT E. LEE."

The whole congregation knew by instinct, the import of the news as this Christian murderer [illegible] his lovely [illegible], with a sense [illegible] reward for his godly life which was about being bestowed upon him. Jeff. Davis left [illegible] church more rapidly than he joined it.

[illegible] MORNING, MAY [illegible]

Rebel Impudence and Rebel Servility

[illegible] with any of the [illegible] full of the most [illegible] toward their country and who [illegible] thousands of times [illegible] to have intercourse with the Yankees nor to live under the same Government with them are now at one time [illegible] asking, beseechingly to be permitted to [illegible] under the protection of the country they contemned and tried to destroy at another time, to assume [illegible] their old pretensions of lordly superiority [illegible] and at first as if they still expect [illegible] treat them with all the consideration [illegible] With them it is but a single step from the most height of haughty arrogance to the lowest possible depth of cringing [illegible] paltry servility. At one time with an impudence that wholly confounds all [illegible] of the most extravagant human [illegible] they presume to dictate the manner in which they and their deluded followers shall be dealt with; at another, with a subserviency unparalleled they attempt to crawl back submissively into the allegiance of the Government which now spurns them and which has no other [illegible] concerning them than to see them executed or otherwise punished.

The more clearly the characters of these [illegible] less [illegible] of sedition and brokers in human [illegible] are known, the greater becomes the contempt and abhorrence which they excite. The more the world is familiarized with so odious a sight, the deeper must be its loathing. The rebel leaders can no longer contend for the respect and esteem of mankind; the only thing that is left them is to hide from the presence of outraged humanity. But it would be in contravention to our knowledge of rebel character to suppose that they will [illegible] the world this great favor. If permitted, they will still obtrude themselves upon the notice of their fellow men and try to appear meritorious when their conduct has been such as would appal the fiends.

These prominent rebels seem not to have the [illegible] idea of the predicament into which they have brought themselves. With shameless impudence they declare that they and their people must be treated magnanimously, just as if it were in the province of conquered traitors to prescribe conditions and limitations to the avenging law. With despicable servility they bow down before their Yankee conquerors, and catch eagerly at everything which seems to grant them a further lease of power, even under Yankee rule. The rebel Governors of Virginia and North Carolina were anxious to reassemble their legislatures in order to take measures to restore those States to the Union. There can be no doubt that every rebel in the land would jump at the chance of getting back into the Union if they could there be again set in high places and thus gratify that sole propensity of a Southern "gentleman," the desire to hold perpetual rule.

But neither their sublime impudence nor their pretended humility and submissiveness, can cause the country to forget what they have been and what they are. The only effect of their present conduct will be to belittle themselves still further in the estimation of a scornful world. Men utterly destitute of any moral force, they do not know how to behave with becoming propriety in any of the vicissitudes of life, and accordingly they either swell into the utmost self importance or sink to the most abject condition of servile humbleness. Success elates them beyond moderation. Failure results in their complete dejection [illegible] the loss of every attribute that gives dignity to the character of man.

Seven Thirties.—The present system of National Finance is meeting with unexampled success. The most sanguine hopes ever entertained of the 7-30 loan are far more than realized. The First and Second Series are all sold, and the sale of the third, amounting to Two Hundred and Thirty Millions is begun. The last Series is like the two former, except that the Government reserves the right to pay six per cent, in gold, instead of 7-30 in currency.

From the rapidity with which the former Series were taken up, it is safe to say that the present one will be speedily absorbed. In every town and hamlet of the United States these securities are held, and foreign capital is also largely invested in them. All who have money [illegible] should hasten to put it in this loan [illegible] Any sum amounting to fifty dollars and upwards may be subscribed [illegible] held by all classes of our people, and it gives them a direct pecuniary interest in the maintenance of the Government. Though true patriotism may need nothing of this kind to strengthen it, yet when a government [illegible] own property, there is no danger that they will permit it to be lost.

The Pirate Shenandoah.—This vessel is reported to be cruising in the western Pacific [illegible] and it is quite likely to make its appearance in the track of the California steamers. The corsair left Melbourne last February. It is known that he captured and burned the ship Delphine in lat. [illegible] long. 63. If he proceeded on his way, he must now be very near our western waters. These piratical crafts will continue to plague our [illegible] for some time to come, pretending not to know [illegible] Confederacy [illegible] when taken sought to suffer death.

The Plague in Russia.—[illegible] terrible epidemic similar to what was formerly known as the plague, has been [illegible] the interior of Russia. [illegible] The number [illegible] hundreds [illegible] be spreading with fearful rapidity, and the most alarming apprehensions exist lest it may [illegible] in the other chief cities of Europe [illegible] ever before known.

[illegible] On Wednesday, April 19th, the [illegible] funeral [illegible] the American [illegible] Washington [illegible] New York [illegible] All this was done [illegible] at the rate of 12 [illegible] telegraphing [illegible] The expense amounted [illegible]

[illegible] must have turned itself on the [illegible] and fearlessly in the midst of the [illegible] and walked about the [illegible] of Charleston.

Washington Territory

[illegible] the most appalling and [illegible] an interest [illegible] an element which [illegible] triumph.

[illegible] that party which [illegible] adversity did not [illegible] all well.

[illegible] We would [illegible] of the great [illegible] would [illegible] have been [illegible] trampled [illegible] only [illegible] traitors no longer. Promo[illegible] taught a lesson throughout the land it would have proclaimed that [illegible] unity and that [illegible] before any who [illegible] that all had this [illegible] then been adopted, our country would now be divided with no hope of restoration.

[illegible] of Washington Territory [illegible] who start [illegible] uphold [illegible] are now [illegible] Their success in the last national election would have been ruin to permit them [illegible] when the great [illegible] ended in the belief that their [illegible] would produce no great harm, would [illegible] They must no more be permitted to gain [illegible] They are the men who betrayed the Republic into the hands of traitors, and while it was struggling for life, stood sullenly by, refusing to lend it aid. If they be traitors you want none of them; if they be true patriots at heart, and yet not possessed of sufficient discernment to comprehend the only question involved in the single simple issue which has been before the country, they are not fit to receive your suffrages, and are not qualified for the positions to which they aspire.

The Union men of Washington Territory can easily triumph if they will. Their party has the prestige of being the friend of the Government; the opposition has proved itself its enemy. Among the Union men of Washington Territory there are now no differences. Their unanimity is perfect. Two years ago they were beaten by the strange [illegible] in their own party. Now, a perfect unity of action will insure success. Mr. Denny is a man whose fitness and integrity are undoubted. With activity on the part of his friends he cannot fail. The extreme north west[illegible] portion of our country must see to it that its vote is cast in the interest of National unity and National freedom.

From North Idaho.—The North Idaho Radiator has the following items:

Al Rupert informs us that extensive diggings were discovered last fall and have been worked during the winter on the south side of Salmon, about twelve miles from Warren's. From five to eight dollars per day have been realized with a rocker. Messrs. [illegible] Smith & Co. are the proprietors of a bedrock flume [illegible] feet long and employ 100 men. These diggings can be worked when business is suspended in other camps on account of ice and snow.

Congress has established a mail route between Placerville, in Boise county, and the camps of Warren and Florence, and proposals will be immediately received for carrying the mail over the same. We are gratified to hear of this, as it meets a want long felt by the people of the different sections. The mutual business relations of these places are close and extensive, and business interests will be very much facilitated by this arrangement.

Expressman Davidson from Oro Fino and Elk City reports things looking up, and great preparations [illegible] made for extensive mining [illegible] at low figures [illegible] during the mining season [illegible] hundreds at wages from six to seven dollars per day. Wm. Dagget [illegible] of J. R. Dagget of this city [illegible] Elk City [illegible] realizes $10 per day.

New diggings are found [illegible] stream emptying into the [illegible] thirty five miles from Warren's. They were discovered late last fall [illegible] that it is generally known [illegible] rush [illegible] that [illegible] Warren's.

CITY.

Council Proceedings.—The regular [illegible] meeting of the Common Council was held in the Chamber last evening. The full [illegible] members were present.

[illegible] Cook, Frazar, Gillmore, Hol[illegible], [illegible] Starr and McCraken, Mayor Failing.

[illegible] minutes were read and approved.

The City Recorder petitioned the Council for authority to purchase blanks and stationery for use in his office, which was granted.

The Committee on health and Police reported [illegible] in favor of the city's [illegible] to employ two Deputies at $100 each per month. The report was adopted.

The City Surveyor reported, as instructed by the Council, an estimate in detail, of the [illegible] grading and macadamizing Front street, from Morrison to Hall; total cost $27,7[illegible]. The report was received and placed on file.

The following claims against the city were referred to the Committee on Judiciary: J. N. Dolph, $6 87; J. H. Mit[illegible] $1[illegible]; [illegible] Dolph, $53.

An [illegible] appropriating $1000 to the M[illegible] Fund, was read the first and second time. Rule 25 was suspended and the [illegible] passed.

An ordinance providing for two Deputy Marshals at a salary of $100 each per month, was read the first and second time.

An [illegible] to amend ordinance [illegible] was referred back to the committee on health and police with instructions to report a new ordinance.

An [illegible] to restrain animals from running at large within the city limits, was read the third time and referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

[illegible] Frazar introduced a resolution to appoint a committee of three to negotiate with the adverse claimant of Block 172 in reference to a [illegible].

[illegible] Starr asked to be excused from [illegible] the committee.

[illegible] further consideration was [illegible].

[illegible] Starr introduced a resolution which [illegible], that whereas the City Council had [illegible] notice on the 17th of April to improve Front [illegible] from Morrison to C street by paving with [illegible], that notice be now given that the former notice is revoked. The Auditor was [illegible] to give proper notice by ten days publication.

A resolution was adopted to give notice that [illegible] proposed to improve Second, Third and [illegible] streets from Couch's Addition to Hall [illegible] by grading and laying down sidewalks [illegible], which was ordered to be published [illegible] days.

[illegible], the Auditor was directed to furnish [illegible] with a correct list of all lots and parts of lots, with the names of all owners, on [illegible], from Morrison to Hall, in order to enter the cost in the city lien books, before ordering the work to be done.

On motion, Council adjourned.

[illegible] of Idaho City by Fire.—[illegible] was [illegible] night by Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express [illegible] of Idaho City, Boise county, [illegible] Thursday the 18th inst. The following [illegible] of Pinkham, published in the [illegible] and that from Jacob Levi to his brother in the [illegible], is authentic which has yet come to hand. [illegible] writes—

Friday, May 20th, 7 a. m.

[illegible] all burned from the upper Theater [illegible] & Co.'s. They are not burned [illegible] I have been lost, as the fire did not last more [illegible] hours.

E. Pinkham.

[illegible] writes—

Friday Morning, May 19th, [illegible]

[illegible] Idaho City caught fire [illegible]. The whole town is burned [illegible] not one house left. Further particulars [illegible] the Express is leaving.

Jacob.

From the former letter it would appear that the destruction is not so general as that implied by the latter. [illegible] at Placerville, twelve miles distant, but it is certain that the business portion of the city, as [illegible] from the upper Theatre to Powell & Co.'s, covering an area of five blocks one way by three the other [illegible] lot of about 1600 by 800 feet—which includes [illegible] to the amount of many thousands, is totally consumed. The origin of the fire was undoubtedly the work [illegible], as it is stated in a private note to F. M. [illegible] of the Dalles that the town had been fired in different [illegible] three days previous. Idaho City was so [illegible] constructed of such combustible materials, that [illegible] destruction has always been predicted in case of [illegible]. It was built on a portion of what is known as [illegible], the lots and blocks originally "jumped" in most [illegible]. The Bar has yielded the best pay in the camp [illegible] accessible to the miner, but being too flat to [illegible] advantage with the buildings on it, frequent [illegible] have arisen concerning the same since 1863, which [illegible] had something to do with the destruction of the [illegible] would be hard to form any correct idea of the [illegible] by this calamity. Many will be reduced to [illegible], no doubt, who were before in easy circumstances, but it has happened at a most favorable season, when the gold claims of the country are being worked, which is a good time to repair damages, [illegible] better ground the adjacent to the destroyed site [illegible] be immediately rebuilt, and stand upon [illegible] basis than ever. A few trains with provisions, will soon set things moving as of [illegible] City. Should there be no loss of life it will [illegible] event, in such a conflagration as this one [illegible].

[illegible]—Fine Paintings.—We have before [illegible] to the excellent artist now in our midst, Mr. J. [illegible], and some of his magnificent paintings, which [illegible] to Oregon. Later our attention is called to Mr. [illegible], an artist of fine taste, who has just returned from [illegible] Wallula, and brings a portfolio freighted with [illegible] views of scenery on the Columbia river. [illegible] he finish them they will enable thousands who [illegible] look upon the originals, to visit many portions of [illegible] at their own rooms. Mount Hood has [illegible] taken by him from Anderson's Hill, overlooking this city, and is a most successful work in water [illegible] the scene. Mr. Taft has with him an elegant [illegible] of the waterfall a few miles below the Cascades, which he has christened Horse-tail. Castle Rock [illegible] of Wind Mountain and surroundings, one of [illegible] on the Columbia, and one near Wal[illegible] [illegible], we hope will be worked up by the [illegible] whether they shall illustrate the history of [illegible] Washington, or go into the magazines to [illegible] mortalized in oil by some genius yet unknown [illegible] the world, they each will, whenever seen, [illegible] the heart of every one who loves nature in her [illegible] and most beautiful array. If Bierstadt carried [illegible] him any more faithful or accurate views than [illegible] was a lucky man. We have heard his M[illegible] [illegible] about but have not yet seen it. If it shall [illegible] the praise of Ludlow, that miserable fop [illegible] like a leech upon the artist, he will be still [illegible]. We half suspect that Col. Ruckel, the [illegible] of the O. S. N. Company, gave complimentary [illegible] to these artists. If so, the Company have [illegible] patrons of true art, entitled themselves to [illegible].

[illegible]—The members of Protection Engine [illegible] No. 4, had their machine out upon trial at the [illegible] of First and Washington streets last evening [illegible] a large crowd to witness the sporting. An [illegible] great standing in the midst was very anxious [illegible] the whys and wherefores of the demonstration [illegible] elicited the following answer from one who [illegible] "Why, it's to keep the boys' muscle up, and the [illegible] from shrinkin'." The machine performed as [illegible] has ever done, since it came to this city—is now [illegible] order. The company are prospering finely, now [illegible] nearly a full list of working men, of whom [illegible] Engineer speaks in terms of commendation. [illegible] for this Company, recently ordered from New [illegible], may be expected upon the arrival of the [illegible]. If [illegible] within a few days, and would it not be advisable [illegible] Council to erect a temporary belfry for its reception [illegible] building now occupied by the Company. [illegible] Company also had a drill at the corner of [illegible] First streets last evening, to test the [illegible] which now comes into use by [illegible] to Salem. She gave perfect satisfaction.

The Mountaineer Estimates.—The sage of the Mountaineer is "gone" on an estimate. He states that Idaho [illegible] has a population "nearly double that of Portland" [illegible] that "Idaho City had a population of about five [illegible]." This would give us "two-and-a-half." [illegible] Really, Idaho City was about double in population [illegible] the Dalles, and may have had 1,500 resident[illegible].

[illegible]—A man named Valentine, well known in [illegible], and for some time a jobber here in grain, [illegible] killed by C. Cordan on the 25th May, in the Ross [illegible] saloon, San Francisco. We have no particulars [illegible].

[illegible] Wine Depot.—The purchasers of fine wines, [illegible], champagne cider, etc., are directed to the [illegible] of Henry Baker, proprietor of the Wine [illegible] First street. His stock embraces every variety [illegible], from the most celebrated vintage to [illegible].

[illegible] Views.—Mr. Desmond, now operating at [illegible] Gallery on First street, is probably the finest [illegible] of New York city, which is an assertion that [illegible] a bold and expansive domain, but [illegible] believe it, call at that gallery and see [illegible] from the run of work, and specimens [illegible].

Teeth like Pearls and Breath of Sweet[illegible] [illegible] by the use of that popular Dentifrice, fragrant "Sozodont," a composition of the [illegible] and purest ingredients, the three most [illegible] requisites, cleanliness, efficacy and convenience being present in the highest possible degree of perfection. It removes all disagreeable [illegible], scurf and tartarous adhesions, insuring a pearl-like whiteness to the teeth, gives tone to the breath, a cool, delicate aromatic fragrance to the mouth, which makes it really a toilet luxury. Sold by Druggists everywhere, at [illegible] cents per bottle.

Miriam's Birthday.

Cousin Miriam—[illegible] kind, patient Cousin Miriam. Now I will tell you all about her, Grace, as I promised I would on this day, her birthday. On this June evening while we two sit together here in this pleasant summer-house, where she and I used to sit on those other June evenings that seem so far away, I will try to make you know her as I knew her, see her as I saw her, as I see her still, looking back through the soft blue distance of years—very good, very beautiful, very patient. I will try to draw her picture faithfully, as truly as I can, but [illegible] I know that after all, my portrait will fall far short of the original, still, I will do my best, Grace, my very best.

First, shall I tell you what it was that [illegible] her so doubly dear to our hearts, [illegible] treasure to be kept, guarded, shielded by our love from the storms and rough winds that blew out in our world—our quiet, calm, stormless world of home—a sacred gift to be considered, [illegible] valued, tended, cherished day by day. Shall I tell you what it was, Grace? Our Miriam was deaf and dumb.

Yet she was life of our life, joy of our joy, mother of our path. For all the shadow that rested upon her and around her—the shadow of a great silence, the deep mysterious hush of this world's music and voices, the absence of all sweet sounds (to whom the birds sang in vain summer after summer, and bees hummed dreamily, and little brooks babbled away through pleasant woods and meadows, and children filled the air with shouting and laughter, but none of these could make our Miriam smile); and yet it was not seldom we saw her smile too, not seldom; and what a glad, sunny smile it was, making us who watched it very glad.

My mother said that Miriam had a secret of her own that made her glad, a ceaseless undersinging in her heart, that sang to her a sweeter song than those she might not hear. And because she heard them not, she seemed ever listening to that inner music, that helped her smiling on her silent way.

Could we help it that we loved her so, that in time she grew to be our very idol? Could we help it that, as day after day and year after year passed by us, our lives grew closer and closer to hers, so close at last, that often while we watched her we would ask each other, Could we live without her now? would it be easy to forget her, and take up again the threads of the old life that we left off weaving when she came to us; would it be very easy? And we always answered, No, how could we? For was not she the brightener of our winter, the sunshine of our June, so to speak, our angel in the house?

I was away at school when Cousin Miriam came to make her home among us; she was my mother's orphan niece, the child of her lost sister. Just two years separated us; she was fourteen, I twelve. How well I remember coming home for the holidays one midsummer day, (the pleasant summer holidays,) and finding her at my mother's side, filling a daughter's place to her.

How well I remember my first boyish impressions of her, and yet I cannot describe them as I would; but as I look at her now through the faithful mirror of memory, she comes before me as distinctly as I saw her that midsummer day, with her pale, sweet, quiet face, and soft brown hair that fell about it like a shadow—and her eyes—Grace, I thought I had never seen any eyes like them before; so loving, and earnest, and thoughtful; so eloquent with their own sweet language, out of which her young heart would looked forth, calm, tender, and beautiful—clear, faithful eyes that, like a pure stream, reflected the stars as well as the sunlight.

Not many days went by before we each felt her presence in the house, like a sweet, holy influence that wove new threads of gladness, and hope, and comfort, into our daily little joys and sorrows.

My mother's heart, if she was cast down by some household care or perplexity, would grow light again when Miriam came in at the door, and to my father she grew dearer every day. As for me, I soon learned to call her sister, and she called me brother, (speaking to each other in that mute finger-language.) We said it was in jest, but there was more of earnest than of jest in those names. I knew that afterwards, when we lost her.

O, Miriam! that was a dreary day—the day we lost you—the day you went away from us, and we had nothing left of you but your empty place and sweet memory, and the presence of a great vast blank where you had sat, or stood, or walked among us. O, Miriam! Miriam! I am glad to think you never knew how wearily we have missed you. I am glad to think you could not hear that troubled cry in our hearts that was ever calling to you from morning till evening, from evening till morning, Miriam! Miriam!—and every room and corner in the house and garden echoed Miriam. And so she lived her life among us—her quiet, kind, patient, self-forgetting life—and those midsummer holidays were the happiest I had ever spent.

What pleasant bright memories I carried back to school when they were over, those much too quickly over, of long days' rambles through fields, and woods, and lanes, we two all by ourselves, with the blue sky over our heads, and soft mosses and wild flowers under our feet, and sunlight around us and within us, and cool green shadows that kept many a resting-place for us—quiet, consecrated spots, like those other resting places we all consecrate in youth, and return to in after years with tired steps to look upon through tears of reverent affection, to sit down once again under the cool, deep shadows, from the heat and dust of life's busy day of travel,—and coming home at evening, when the dew was falling, and the nightingales were singing, though only one of us might listen to their sweet mournful music—only one. And then, when "good night" came to be said, how pleasant it seemed to remember that we should meet again the next day, and the next, and the next, that we would be together every day through the long, long holidays. It was wonderful how soon the people in our village grew to love Cousin Miriam; wonderful how men and women and little children felt a thrill of gladness whenever she crossed the path. Yet no, it was not wonderful, for Miriam had such a gentle, sympathising way about her, such a ready interest in all that pleased or troubled those she met in her way, such kindness in rejoicing with them, such skill in comforting, that people grew to love her every day, and knew it not. I was always her interpreter; through me she heard many a little household story of joys and troubles, hopes and anxieties, many a heart and life history; and through me passed back again the word of sympathy, or help, or counsel, that the sealed lips might not express, though the tender heart was always ready.

And so the years went by us—summer after summer, and winter after winter, came and went—June after June, and Christmas after Christmas. I came home for the holidays, and still that other face was there to add its smile of welcome to the dear home greetings. Yes, Miriam, my heart's own sister, you were one more drop of gladness in my cup at coming-home time, but also one more drop of pain when the last day of holidays came, and the last good by was said. It was always so in our life here: each new tree that grows in our garden both bears us fruit and blossom to add to our store, and also casts another shadow across our path. Happy if, after we have gathered the flowers, we can rest quietly under the shadow, still enjoying the perfumed leaves, even while they are fading one by one in our hand. Happy if our cherished tree be an evergreen, so leaving us a shadow for rest afterwards, and not the chilling sight of cold, dry, leafless branches marking the place where the flowers have been. So the years went by us year after year till we counted six. Miriam was a woman now, and had left school and entered college. Yes, Miriam was grown to be a woman, a gentle, thoughtful, earnest-hearted woman, very good, very beautiful, very patient.

But the years which had brought strength and vigor to her inner life, unfolding day by day its quiet beauty, brought little or none to the frail outer being. Miriam was not strong; she had never been strong from her childhood. It always seemed to us that the thread of her human life but held her with a slender clasp that grew more slender every year, gently unwinding itself day by day, as if it feared to let her feel too painfully the slackening of its hold. My mother began to speak of Miriam in her letters as being delicate; that her cough made her feel uneasy; she had it so long that she thought her paler and thinner than she used to be. Still, I knew my mother was apt to be over anxious, so I hoped on in spite of her troubled words.

At last she wrote to say that the doctors had ordered sea air for Miriam, and so, when the long summer vacation came, we all went for a few weeks to the sea. It was a pleasant, happy time we spent there, a quiet, tranquil time, filled with sunny hours, to be laid by for after memories, treasured sacredly forever. We used to sit for long, long hours on the shore, Miriam and I, watching the wild, ceaseless, unresting waves that would never be still for a moment, that have never been still since the day when the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, and will never rest till the earth and the heaven shall be dissolved, and there shall be no more sea.

Long, long hours we sat there by the sea, Miriam and I, and learned not, though to her it must have seemed [illegible] the restlessness of a great silence, the strife and tumult of life without the music. And so we let the hours go by without ever saying [illegible] them, sitting there watching the waves come and go like the hopes and dreams, and yearnings that make the tides of our lives, or reading those wonderful poems of Mrs. Browning, wonderful for their [illegible] rich wealth of thought, wonderful for their [illegible] living, earnest strength.

How Miriam delighted in those poems, how I have seen her eyes kindle and her cheek glow as page after page unfolded to her new chamber in the treasure of thought. How very dear to her [illegible] to think of the same [illegible] of that master [illegible] another but [illegible]

I went back [illegible] two bright months [illegible] and then we [illegible] went home again, and Miriam [illegible] the sea air [illegible] the change [illegible] the [illegible] it by the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] the garden, [illegible] [illegible] city of [illegible]

[illegible] weeks after that [illegible] no change [illegible] better or worse [illegible] day by day [illegible] was [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] was [illegible] who watched [illegible] it [illegible] making [illegible] and [illegible] we listened [illegible] and [illegible] and we could not sigh or weep.

It was the middle of October when I returned to college—only for eight weeks, Miriam and I said to each other, the last evening before I went away—only for eight weeks, and then she put into my hand a little Bible, nicely bound, with my name and hers written in the beginning, asking me to keep it always for her sake. Surely there was little need to ask that.

I took it [illegible] my own room, and turning over the leaves before I packed it up I found a little mark in that verse which speaks of the land where the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing.

Why had she marked that verse now? Did she [illegible] that [illegible] was not very far off? And the next day as I bade my mother good by, I whispered in her ear, "Will Cousin Miriam die, mother? [illegible] going to leave us soon?" and my mother answered, "I hope not. [illegible] I trust not. Not yet," she added, as if speaking to herself; "[illegible] not yet," and all my heart echoed "not yet."

And then I went away with a hope and a fear growing side by side in my heart, but even as I watched them growing, I saw that the hope had taken the deepest root. It is ever so with us, thank God, it is ever so. Wind and bitter must be the storm, sharp and sudden the uprooting, that can deprive us of that priceless tree of life which God's hand has placed in the midst of our human garden. Is it not an emblem of that other tree, growing by the river side, in the midst of His Paradise, whose leaves are for the healing of the nations? and are nations made up of human hearts?

Only eight weeks, Miriam and I had said to each other, on that last evening; only eight weeks; yet how slowly they seemed to pass—slowly to me, counting week by week, day by day. At last they were ended, and I left off counting, and once more the glad Christmas time came, and once more I was at home again. How well I remember that home-coming, so different from all the others that had gone before it. My father meeting me at the door alone. The empty drawing room, silent, deserted, and dreary, though the warm winter fire was shedding around on every thing the same bright living light it had shed there many, many Christmases, and things were in their old places, and nothing was changed; everything was just where it had always been, except Miriam. She never left her room now; my father said, and my mother watched beside her night and day.

Could we live without her now? It was years since we had ceased to ask each other that question; now we must ask it once more, not now to each other, but to God; we must ask Him for strength to [illegible] us to answer it according to His will, not ours.

All through that Christmas week we watched [illegible] the waning of [illegible] Calmly, hopefully, with [illegible] passing [illegible] brightness [illegible] [illegible] that [illegible] And when [illegible] and we spoke [illegible] our tears [illegible] the thought of how she was [illegible] [illegible] where the ears of the deaf [illegible] the tongue of the dumb [illegible] with [illegible] of Miriam, [illegible]
